3rd COVID-19 vaccine recommended for transplant recipients, immunocompromised

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has recommended a third dose of the Pfizer-BioNTech or Moderna COVID-19 vaccines for people with moderately to severely compromised immune systems. This would include those who have had a heart, stem cell or organ transplant and are on immunosuppressive treatment. It also includes those who have weakened immune systems due to disease or other medical treatment including active cancer therapy.

The CDC estimates those eligible comprise approximately 3% of the U.S. population. It also includes those with HIV and genetic conditions that weaken the immune system.

The new CDC guidance does not recommend a third shot for anyone who received the Johnson & Johnson vaccine, nor for the general population who do not fall into one of the above categories.

The third shot is recommended approximately eight months after the second for those who meet the criteria.

"Research indicates a third COVID vaccine dose will provide people with moderately to severely weakened immune systems more protection against COVID-19 infection and reduce the risk of serious, prolonged illness if an individual contracts COVID-19," the CDC said in a statement.
