

Lewiston Dance Center gets back to 'normal' with recitals & competition

It was a strange dance season with the coronavirus pandemic, but the Lewiston Dance Center, in business since 1993, got through it.

Teachers had to deal with things such as smaller groups, Zoom classes, and getting used to dancing in a mask. They were able to manage a picture day, so the families could get a keepsake of the dance season. Most importantly, students were able to have their dance recitals last weekend – and it was a big success.

“After not being allowed to finish out our 2020 season because of COVID, we were so thankful to be able to get the dancers on the big stage,” studio director Rachel Novelli said. “We worked with Rich Meranto from the Performing Arts Center at NFHS on a safety plan, and we figured out how many friends and family we were allowed to have to each show and how we would distance everyone among other things. The culmination of the season with great dance steps, beautiful costumes and accolades for all of the dancers was more important than ever this season. So much has been taken from these kids; we were going to do anything possible to make sure they got their time to shine up on that stage! It was a very busy weekend, but worth every minute of work.”

The Lewiston Dance Center also was finally able to take its dance teams to competition, winning two: Legacy Dance Challenge (ensemble and the competition teams), and New York State Dance Challenge (competition teams). It also took home a slew of other awards.

A press release said, “Lewiston Dance is very proud of the dedication and hard work of all of their teams. A lot of our numbers placed in the Top 10 overall. Meaning, out of all of the many groups in their age and competitive level, they placed within the top 10.”
