Brothers Osborne teams with road band for new album

produced the last few records. It is something that he loves to do, because your road band just has a bit of a different sound to studio musicians," John said. "Studio players are some of the best musicians in the world, and they're very quick and very efficient. But what he wants is the guys that have played with us on the road and we're familiar playing with because, throughout the years of us playing together, I mean, our bass player has been with us from day one. And he grew, in the ways that we have. And our drummer has been with us for eight years now, and he's grown with us as well.

"So, they're as much of a part of the story as anything else is; and it would only be fitting for us to be playing with the guys that we're playing with all the time. And, inherently, because they're not studio musicians, they're going to bring something a little bit different to the table. It might take a little bit longer, but it will represent our sound better. And if you go see us play live, you're hearing the musicians that played on the record, so it all relates."

Brothers Osborne is a touring band. T.J. and John missed performing live in 2020.

"Yeah, well it's funny: Conceptually for this record, we wanted it to reflect our live show the most - more so than our other records," John said. "We wanted it to really reflect a Brothers Osborne live show, because that's what I feel like we do best, out of our skillset. And the complete irony of the situation is that we ended up not playing them at all. We played one show in 2020, and it was a private party, and it was a wedding. And, believe me, it was the most fun that we had all year - it was the only show we got to play.

"We just started playing live again, as of a couple weeks ago, and we're trying songs out. And it feels really, really great. In fact, two days ago, we ended our last day of rehearsal. We had four straight days of rehearsals. We're bringing production; lights; the whole big production - I don't want to give any surprises away.

"So, instead of us just coming back to play a show again, we're just going all out. I think anyone that's doing creative, I think they should treat every moment as if it might be their last. And we're treating this tour that, if this is the one we go out on, we'll be very proud of it."

Hearing a little bit about Artpark's lauded offerings, John said, "We can't wait to see this award-winning venue."

Artpark & Company Vice President of Concerts & Marketing Dave Wedekindt said, "For the past several years, we've been hearing from Artpark concertgoers that they would like to see some country music on our schedule. The challenge is that summer is prime touring season for country acts and they often tour as large, multi-act bills designed to play larger amphitheatres, fairs and festivals. The acts that are the right size in popularity to play Artpark often tour on these packages, therefore making them unavailable to us. But in the case of Brothers Osborne, timing was right. We knew there was something special about them - they liked the idea of performing at Artpark, and we've actually had them confirmed and on sale since January 2020. Thankfully, their popularity has only continued to grow during a time when most touring musicians were forced off the road due to the pandemic.

"It will certainly feel like a 19-plus-month celebration in the making when they take the stage on Aug. 3. We've all been through a lot to get to this point!"
